

SOCIOLOGY (SOC) (SOCL)

---

SOC 310. Sociological Theory. 3 Hours.

This course is an overview of the development of the field of sociology and sociological theories. Course contents will include a discussion of the major schools of thought in sociology as well as classical and contemporary sociological theorists.

SOC 314. Social Psychology. 3 Hours.

This course explores the manner in which the personality, perceptions, attitudes, motivations, and behaviors of the individual influence and are influenced by social groups. The course investigates the nature and causes of individual behavior in the context of society.

SOC 315. Law and Society. 3 Hours.

This course is an examination of the nature, functions, and limitations of law as an instrument of social control. Emphasis is placed on developing an understanding of the situational and systemic demands within which actors in the legal system operate and perform their roles and in developing a perspective which views law as a practical resource and as a mechanism for handling the widest range of unspecified social issues, problems, and conflicts. This course is cross listed with CJ 315.

SOC 323. Social Stratification. 3 Hours.

This course is an overview of the relative social positions of people in a given social group, category, geographic region, or other social units with particular emphasis on socioeconomic status based on factors such as wealth, income, social status, occupation, and power. Course contents also include a discussion of the three major divisions of social class (upper class, middle class, and lower class) used in contemporary Western societies to rank categories of people in a hierarchy.

SOC 325. Crime and Delinquency. 3 Hours.

This course is a study of the meaning, nature, and extent of crime and delinquency, including analysis and evaluation of preventive and treatment methods. Emphasis will be on theories of crime and delinquency causation. This course is cross listed with CJ 325.

SOC 330. Institutional Corrections, Theory and Practice. 3 Hours.

This course examines the historical development of corrections including concepts on punishment and rehabilitation. Emphasis is placed on institutional corrections from conviction to release. This course is cross listed with CJ 330.

SOC 354. Research Methods and Ethics. 3 Hours.

This course is an introduction to the basic concepts and techniques used in conducting social science research. The course emphasizes the steps involved in conducting academic research, the various methods used in conducting such research along with the merits, and the limitations of each method. Course materials will include a research proposal reflecting the research process. Prerequisite: Senior standing or instructor permission.

SOC 380. Ethnic and Cultural Diversity in America. 3 Hours.

This course reviews the originalities and experiences of the various national, ethnic, cultural, religious, and social groups that make up what is known today as the United States of America. Attention is also paid to how such originalities and/or experiences impact or influence contemporary realities for each group. Cross listed with CJ 380.

SOC 385. Globalization and Social Change. 3 Hours.

This course provides students with the ability to apply social science concepts and approaches to better understand the ways in which globalization impacts societies and individuals. The course will also highlight the ways in which sociological theory applies to contemporary forms of social interaction at the global level, international travel and migration, global business, and relationships between countries. Students will also learn how globalization has impacted marriage and family arrangements, educational institutions, work environments, and perceptions of human rights related to race, class, gender, and sexuality.

SOC 410. Sociology of Aging. 3 Hours.

This course will introduce students to the sociological study of aging, helping them better understand the sociological processes of aging throughout the life course, as well as important sociological variables that impact these processes. The course will introduce students to important demographic changes facing aging populations. Using sociological theories and methodological frameworks, students will also understand a wide range of important topics related to aging and the life course, including current trends, impacts on the family, work and retirement, socio-political and socio-economic impacts, global trends, and future directions.

SOC 422. Gender, Race and Crime. 3 Hours.

This course provides students with an understanding of the social realities of crime and justice in America. The course is a sociological review of the role class, race, and gender play in the way the American society reacts to the issues of crime and criminal behaviors. Topics to be covered include but are not limited to: social class and social stratification, inequality, social construction of race and ethnicity, gender and sex in society, victimization and intersectionality, law enforcement and criminal prosecutions, and punishment, sentencing, and imprisonment.

SOC 450. Sociology of Drugs and Drug Trafficking. 3 Hours.

This course is a sociological examination of the issues relating to the international drug trade, drug laws, and drug law enforcement in both America and around the world. Course will present an overview of the history of drugs, drug trafficking, and drug use and abuse with emphasis on U.S. drug policies, drug laws, the U.S. war on drugs, and efforts at treatment of Americans addicted to drugs. Discussions will also include the source countries and trafficking routes.

SOC 460. Sociology of Health and Wellness. 3 Hours.

This course will provide students with a sociological review and analysis of health and wellness topics. The course will enhance student knowledge of sociological theory and methodology by exploring a wide range of topics, such as societal understandings of health, illness, and wellness, health inequalities, demographic variables and their relationship to health and wellness outcomes, and a sociological understanding of healthcare providers, settings, and policies.

SOC 480. Careers in Sociology. 3 Hours.

In this course, students will reflect upon the discipline of sociology and its application to a variety of career trajectories. They will also prepare for careers that utilize sociological skills, as well as study current trends in employment for sociologists. Finally, they will complete career-related assignments that demonstrate an understanding of their own professional growth using discipline-specific skills.

SOC 485. Religion and Society. 3 Hours.

Course is an overview of the cultural, social, economic, and political contexts of the concept of religion. Course contents include both classical and contemporary sociological thoughts on the concept of religion, religious consciousness, religious practice, the meaning and significance of religion, and social expressions of religion.

SOC 489. Individual Study. 3 Hours.

This course provides individual instruction designed for exigent circumstances.

SOC 490. Senior Seminar. 3 Hours.

Designed as a capstone experience for students of sociology, this course will both unify and synthesize knowledge gained throughout their undergraduate years by exploring connections between people and society. In addition to a general review of the theories, methods, and substantive areas covered in core sociology courses, the class will investigate various career options available to sociologists. Prerequisite: Major in sociology and senior standing or instructor permission.

SOC 495. Sociology Internship (EL). 3 Hours.

This course provides an opportunity for sociology majors or minors to be exposed to real world situations where they can apply their sociological knowledge and be in a position to see and appreciate where and how theory and practice meet in a variety of supervised work environments.

Prerequisite: Senior standing or permission of instructor.

SOC 497. Special Topics. 3-6 Hours.

Instructors will provide an organized class designed to cover areas of specific interest. Students may repeat the course when topics vary.

SOCL 1301. Introduction to Sociology. 3 Hours.

This course will introduce students to the basics of sociological thinking. It will help them better understand the social world in which they live, as well as the social forces that shape human behavior. It provides an overview of major sociological concepts and principles including theory and method, culture and socialization, social structure and institutions, social stratification of race, gender and class, and deviance and social control.

SOCL 2301. Marriage and Family. 3 Hours.

Using a sociological perspective, this course examines the institution of marriage and identifies family structures through an overview of the current topics affecting family and a discussion of sex, marriage, and family in historical and cross-cultural context. It covers topics including changing gender roles, kinship ties, family types, family problems, and aging.

SOCL 2350. Introduction to Social Work. 3 Hours.

This course is designed to introduce students to the field of social work and the concept of social welfare along with the values and ethics that guide the social work profession and the setting in which social workers are employed. The historical roots of the field of social work and the profession's commitment to diverse and at-risk populations and social/economic justice are highlighted.

SOCL 2370. Contemporary Social Issues and Concerns. 3 Hours.

This course involves the study of current issues of concern to Americans and people around the world. Issues relating to terrorism, crime and punishment, inequality, poverty, human rights and freedoms, immigration, health and healthcare, and global warming are explored along with their causes, consequences, and possible solutions.

SOCL 289. Independent Study. 3 Hours.

This course provides individual instruction. Students may repeat the course when topics vary.

SOCL 335. Media and Society. 3 Hours.

The course provides students with the ability to apply social science concepts and approaches to better understand the ways in which people use and consume various forms of media. It will also highlight the ways in which sociological theory applies to contemporary forms of social interaction, including online social networks, political and social movement media campaigns, and the online social construction of race, class, gender, and sexuality.

SOCL 345. Sociology of Crime and Justice. 3 Hours.

Students are provided with the ability to apply social science concepts and approaches to better understand and analyze the relationships between law, crime, criminal behavior, politics, public policy, justice, and punishment from a sociological perspective. The course will also highlight the factors that influence such relationships.

SOCI 355. Medical Sociology. 3 Hours.

This course provides students with the ability to apply social science concepts and approaches to understand the ways in which members of a culture diagnose and respond to illness. Sections reviewed in the course include doctor-patient interaction, the social construction of health and illness, the history of medical sociology, the health care system in contemporary society, alternative medical practices, and differential health outcomes by race, class, gender, sexuality, and geographical location.